

April 29, Psalms 56, Put my tears in your bottle

Morning prayer:

Lord, I have a predetermined yes to trusting you in the time that I am afraid. I will become afraid today - I know that I've spent much of my life, letting fear of men dictate my thoughts. Yes, this type of fear has trampled me. It brings distortion to your word. But in you, God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom I am eternally bound to - I will praise your word, and not let it be distorted this morning.

Afternoon prayer:

I continue on this afternoon, trusting you to protect my steps from the enemy, who would use fear to bring me down. Even though the devil tries to distort your word, I will not be afraid, but I will put my trust in you, even though he tries to distort the eternal life that you've deposited in me. I will commit myself to you. You will fight for me.

Evening prayer:

Thank you Lord, for putting all the DNA of my tears in your eternal bottle. You know my wanderings they are written in your book. I know you are for me because you've heard my cries over and over again and delivered me from the enemy. Nothing can separate me from your love that is mine in Christ. In you, I will praise your word. I will not be afraid... Because what can men actually do to me, when you were the one who justified me, cleansed me and ever lives to intercede for me. I love because you first love me I'm able to fulfill my vow, because you were so faithful to yours, yes you've kept my feet from falling into the generational traps so that I could walk before you in the light. Yes, if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we are fellowship one with another in the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanses us from all sin.
